

MAKING PIPE ORGANS.

Interesting Work That Is Done In the Voicing Room.

Both the metal and wooden pipes of a pipe organ are made on the selfsame principle of the willow whistles that every man made when he was a boy, and so, after all, a pipe organ, the mightiest musical instrument yet invented, is but the evolution of that primitive pipe of Pan, the willow whistle.

The most interesting place in an organ factory is the voicing room. Up to the time the pipes enter this room they are as dumb as broomsticks. Here the breath of life is breathed into them, and they are made to speak, each in the voice intended by its maker. Here the big fat pipes are taught to thunder out their diapason and those scarce the diameter of a slate pencil and one-half an inch long to utter their shrill whistle and others the thousands of varying tones between. And not only must the pipes of one stop speak correctly as individuals and members of their own particular family, but they must be in accord with all the hundreds of others in whose midst they are to live. To see that they do this is the work of a man whose ear is keen to the slightest variation and who must know why a pipe does not speak as it should and how to make it. One by one the pipes are set upon the wind chest standing here, with the bellows and all the internal mechanism of an organ properly adjusted and with a keyboard in front of him the voicer tests each one. By changing the size and shape of the aperture through which the wind passes he governs the tone until it is exactly what it should be, a task which only a man with the nicest sense of sound can accomplish.

DESKS OF FAMOUS MEN.

There Are Many of Them Scattered About the Country.

The desk of Salmon P. Chase, a plain piece of furniture made from mahogany, is in one of the rooms of the treasury department at Washington. There are many of these old desks scattered about the country, their chief claim to interest being that once some well known man leaned over them.

Alexander Hamilton's traveling desk, made of mahogany and measuring 12 by 16 inches and 10 inches high, is an interesting object. Upon this desk was written much of his literary work, and the worn green baize with which it is lined attests to the use to which it was put. There is a drawer in one side and several compartments for pens and ink, while upon the top is inlaid a silver plate with the name "General Alexander Hamilton" engraved upon it. Within the top is a strip of parchment which says, "Given by Mrs. General Schuyler to her daughter, Mrs. General A. Hamilton." No doubt the convenient size was what recommended it to the general.

Nathaniel Hawthorne's desk is preserved at the custom house, Salem, Mass. A desk at which he wrote some of his inimitable romances was just a board standing out from the wall at an angle. This is still in the tower room at Wayside, his home at Concord, Mass. Victor Hugo had in his Guernsey house a study built almost entirely of glass and perched upon the roof. Like Hawthorne, he, too, stood at his writing, and his desk was a mere shelf fastened by hinges to the wall.—Delineator.

Origin of a Phrase.

Many years ago the wild deer that roamed through the forests of England used to dig holes in the earth with their forefeet. They pawed it out sometimes to the depth of several inches, sometimes a foot or more. These holes were called "scrapes," and travelers at dusk or night or those who were careless about their footing often tumbled into them. They were laughed at for their heedlessness when they came home covered with mud, and, as this frequently occurred after they had been inhibiting a bit, they were said to have "got into a scrape." Some Cambridge students took up this expression, and thus it came to be applied to people who had got into difficulties of various sorts.

Cooked Under Water.

In 1700 one James Austin laid a wager of $500 that he would cook a plump pudding ten feet beneath the surface of the Thames near Rotherhithe. The bet was readily accepted, and many people flocked to the appointed locale to watch this strange exhibition of the callous art. Inclosed in a tin pan in the center of a sack of lime the pudding was lowered beneath the water, where for two hours and a half it remained. It was then taken up and partaken of by a committee, who declared that Austin had won his wager, the pudding being, if anything, overdone.

And Her Money.
